Resilience for All Ages

Creating a trauma-informed culture has never been more important than in the time of COVID. After a review of trauma and the principles of trauma-informed care, this session will delve into the intersections of the COVID-19 pandemic and trauma-informed care. Special considerations for older adults and families will be explored. Most especially, the session will highlight the importance of paying attention to staff concerns and suggesting ways organizations can provide a supportive environment that builds resilience. The session will be interactive and will draw on participants' insights and observations. Concrete examples and resources will allow participants to jump into action right away in their own settings and roles.
